

Caroline H. Vickers is Associate Professor in the Department of English at California State University, San Bernardino. Her main interests include discourse analysis, language and identity, language and power, medical discourse, narrative, second language socialization, and sociolinguistics. Her research generally focuses on communicative situations in institutional settings that involve interactions between people with divergent histories and embodied experiences in the world. Her work has been published in the Communication & Medicine, Critical Inquiry in Language Studies, Journal of Pragmatics, Modern Language Journal, International Journal of Applied Linguistics, English Language Teaching Journal, Arizona Working Papers in Second Language Acquisition and Teaching, and in the volume, Methods in Cognitive Linguistics, John Benjamins, 2007. In addition, Dr. Vickers has presented her work both nationally and internationally. An Introduction to Sociolinguistics: Society and Identity, which Dr. Vickers co-authored with Dr. Sharon Deckert, will be published by Continuum Press in 2011.

Dr. Vickers' current research, which focuses on bilingual medical consultations, is funded by the National Institute for Nursing Research. She is also a fellow with the Center for the Promotion of Health Disparities Research & Training at California State University, San Bernardino, where she is engaged in interdisciplinary research on health disparities in Southern California.
